Short biography of January speaker, Clare Stuligross at the Health Council of Marin's January 2022 meeting.

Clara Stuligross has agreed to speak to us virtually on Jan. 25th about the effects of pesticides on bees. Is there any way to know if we'll have a quorum, or even good attendance? It would be nice to know if we'll have a decent-sized audience. Here is her bio for the agenda if needed:

*Clara Stuligross is a PhD candidate in ecology with Neal Williams at the University of California, Davis. She is interested in the direct and interactive effects of environmental stressors on native bees. Specifically, she focuses on nutrition and pesticide exposure and their comparative effects on Osmia lignaria and Bombus vosnesenskii fitness, health, and behavior.*

She is broadly interested in bee biology, population ecology, and understanding how bees interact with their environments in natural and managed ecosystems. She uses a combination of landscape, field cage, and lab experiments to study these interactions at different scales. Previously, she worked as a science educator at Carnegie Museum of Natural History, a research technician with Rufus Isaacs at Michigan State University studying bee communities in blueberry fields. She was also an undergraduate researcher with T'ai Roulston, Rosemary Malfi, and Wendy Tori studying bumble bee foraging, parasitism, and ecological niche modeling.
